Twinning, a promising dynamic process to strengthen the agency of midwives

By Franka Cadée

1. Implementing twinning between associations of midwives globally can enhance the agency midwives urgently need to play a key role in improving sexual and reproductive healthcare. (this thesis)
2. A clear definition of what twinning is, and what it is not, will help twinning collaborations keep a unified focus on joint goals and uphold the shared values of reciprocity and equity. (this thesis)
3. Incorporating one-to-one twin pairing in twinning collaborations contributes to their success. (this thesis)
4. Cultural differences can both hinder and facilitate the professional growth of twins. The art of twinning is to keep searching for a balance between too little and too much (cultural) friction. (this thesis)
5. There is no 'one size fits all' approach to successful twinning. The chances of success are greater when we are open to non-linear processes and allow space for a change of direction when needed. (this thesis)
6. Midwifery is not a collection of activities that can be divided amongst different maternity healthcare workers. Midwifery is a fundamental model of continuity of care that is practised by midwives.
7. The focus on maternal and neonatal mortality rate indicators has put too much value on women and babies staying alive, rather than valuing their human right to a good life.
8. The position of midwives in a society reflects the sexual and reproductive health and rights of women in that same society: strong support for midwives results in better health and the protection of the human rights of women and children.
9. Self-preservation is best achieved by learning when to say yes, instead of learning when to say no.
10. If you have found something you have probably not looked properly. (Freely translated from Rutger Kopland)
11. When you really want something, you have to be prepared to work really hard, take advantage of opportunity, and above all never give up. (Jane Goodall)
